Chapter 1 by CHASE HERRINGTON

I sit down, open the book and I fall in "Am I in the "Goldie Locks and the Three bears" I say to myself as I am in a forest. But It had much more to it than I could see until I went further in.

Chapter 2 by Pigletpaige

I walked in to the kind of happy kind of not looking forest. I followed the small road that was worn down from many feet treading its path. The deeper I went, the darker it got. Eventually, I was so confused that the only thing I could do was follow the path. I continued through what felt like miles of trees and vines and brambles. I had been walking for several hours when I came to the cottage. I thought "Oh, it's the three bears cottage! Finally, I'll just make sure I don't break their chairs, or eat their porridge, or sleep in their beds and maybe they'll help me". So, I walked to the door and knocked three times. To my surprise, it wasn't a bear that opened the door, it was a grandmother. She had quite long ears, and her teeth looked sharp enough to cut stone, but what choice did I have? It was go inside with this kind of creepy kind of sweet grandma or keep walking down this path that may take me nowhere.

She said,"Come in dearest. Let me get you some tea and cookies."

She had me at "tea and cookies". I was starved. I hadn't eaten anything since breakfast. (Excent a few of those bread crumbs I found on the path. They were kind of stale though.) When I was inside, we sat down at her little table.

"Welcome to Neverending."

"It was a long journey, but you made it."

See, I told you just a sweet old granny.

Chapter 3 by CHASE HERRINGTON

As I walked in and smelled the nice fresh bread and hear the pot of weird looking tea boiling grandma shut the door with a bang. As i turn around I see her locking it up and up and I swear I saw at least 6 locks on the door. I ask her in a kind of concerned voice "What is the matter, why do you have to lock the door." She says "Well to keep you safe my dear." "Well is there something wrong, is there something coming" I say with a more anxious voice. "Just to keep you here" she says with a sharp tone back. And then all of a sudden everything goes black.
